the flour, the butter, the wine, and with some hesitation and impelled only by a sense of duty, the whisky, to find that the adulterater has done his work in all. He would next investigate the clothing ment of the adulterater. But we think his disgust would reach an unusual height on finding that even the grease of the despised hog had not escaped the pollution of the adulterator, that no creature is so lowly or so fifthy but that filthier hands will adulterate its products with something cheaper and nastier, and palm off the deception on a non-si public, provided only and always that by deceiving the public aforesaid they can increase their own gains. If, curious to head, this super-mundane traveler would betake himself to the great packing houses at Chicago, he would find to his utter astonishment this adulteration carried on in the most systematic way. He would find, for example, the oil of beef fat pressed out to be used as an adulterant for butter, and stearine of the beef mixed with cotton-seed oil and
